

Kaye Umansky

PRINCE
FROG FACE

 PRINCE
FROG FACE

PRINCE FROG FACE

Kaye Umansky

With illustrations by Ben Whitehouse

Contents

For Mo and Ella

1	How It Began	1
2	Not a Pleasant Sight	6
3	Well, Well, Well!	16
4	Feeble Froggy	26
5	An Unexpected Fancy	35
6	Moan, Moan, Moan!	45
7	No Webbed Feet	52
8	No Time for Girls	55
9	How It Ended	59

First published in 2015 in Great Britain by Barrington Stoke Ltd
18 Walker Street, Edinburgh, EH3 7LP

www.barringtonstoke.co.uk

Text © 2015 Kaye Umansky
Illustrations © 2015 Ben Whitehouse

The moral right of Kaye Umansky and Ben Whitehouse to be identified as the author and illustrator of this work has been asserted in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced in whole or in any part in any form without the written permission of the publisher

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library upon request

ISBN: 978-1-78112-443-7

Printed in China by Leo

Chapter 1

How It Began

It all kicked off on a Monday.

I'm talking about the grim business of me getting turned into a frog. I'll tell you about it, but if you dare to laugh, I'll jolly well have you clapped into a dungeon. I can do that because I'm a prince. Prince Valentine of Romantica. With a name like that, I can do what I jolly well like.

Anyway, that Monday I was strolling around the palace gardens because I needed a breather. I had spent all morning interviewing princesses for the top job of being My Girlfriend. Mummy and Daddy think I spend too much time on my hobbies. They say I should get out more. So I agreed to give the girlfriend thing a go. To see if there was anyone up to my standards.

I was wearing my best gold crown, my gold suit and a new pair of gold shoes. I have to say I looked pretty amazing. Blingtastic, in fact. Apart from the pimple on my nose, but I couldn't help that.

There were quite a few princesses up for the girlfriend job. That's no surprise. What's a princess without a prince to prop her up? Nothing, right? And who wouldn't want to be seen with me, with the whole top-to-toe gold thing I had going on?

So far, I had seen six princesses. Six interviews on a Monday morning. I ask you.

None of them were any good. No class at all. Terrible shoes. Too stuck-up or too giggly. They chattered like fools, or they just sat in silence and stared at the pimple on my nose. So rude.

I'd asked them each 20 questions, given them points for their answers and written notes in my little black book. But, to tell you the truth, I was wasting my time. I dismissed them all and told them I'd let them know in the unlikely event that they made the shortlist. They looked pretty fed up as they drove off in their stretch limos. One or two of them were crying into their phones. Sob stories. I wasn't bothered. Plenty more where they came from.

There was the next six, for starters.

Right now, they were out on the terrace taking tea. On my bill, I might add. I'd need to get the money back from them for that later. Footmen were handing around plates of chocolate cake, but none of it got eaten. I suppose the princesses didn't want to spoil their outfits with crumbs. Plus, they were all too busy tossing their hair and being snooty and staring daggers at each other. Well, they were fighting for me, weren't they? They weren't there to make friends. These interviews were a serious business.

So, there I was, taking a breather, when I saw something out of the corner of my eye.

Someone was over by the pond. Bending over, picking something. Not a gardener, or one of the footmen – they don't tend to hang out by ponds. Not a lost princess either, if the rags she was wearing were anything to go by. I looked again. It was a scruffy old woman, dressed all in black and with a basket on her arm.

